
Anybody Use Digital Video Recorders?

Posted by vox1957 - 2008/05/09 15:47

I'm wanting to get a digital video recorder. This is the kind of thing that stumps me every time...there is so much out there that sorting through it freezes my brain.

Does anyone have one they could recommend, think is fairly easy to use, basic w/o mystifying bells and whistles?

=====

Re:Anybody Use Digital Video Recorders?

Posted by rebecca - 2008/08/16 18:06

I love my flip video. It has a USB port that downloads all the video right into my computer. I post my videos on my blog - takes a few minutes. No brainer! Uses regular batteries.

http://www.theflip.com/products_flip_ultra.shtml

=====

Re:Anybody Use Digital Video Recorders?

Posted by poonam - 2010/08/19 06:01

The Digital Video Recorder (DVR) is replacing VCRs for everyday Recording of Television Programs. The Digital Video Recorder (DVR) offers much more control about how and when you watch Television Shows. Take a look at my choices for the Top 10 in Digital Video Recorder (DVR). The newest TiVo is a High Definition Digital Video Recorder for under $300. TiVo HD includes 2 CableCard slots for the capability of recording two digital cable channels at once or watching one show while recording another. Record 180 hours of Standard Definition TV or 20 Hours of High Definition TV on the 160GB Hard Drive. You must subscribe to a monthly TiVo service plan to use the TiVo HD, and it only works with Cable or over-the-air analog (NTSC) and digital (ATSC) broadcasts, not Satellite TV. The best DVR available based on price and performance.

competitions win prizes

=====